Madrid, 31 de enero de 2016

ElevenPaths, the Cybersecurity unit of Telefónica, and Hasten Group, a leading technology consultancy company specializing in Big Data, SmartCities, Digital Transformation, Mobile Application Development and Web Development, have signed a technology cooperation agreement. This new strategic alliance reinforces the goal of both companies in the development of new innovative technologies in cybersecurity, code analysis, and development and implementation of mobile applications.

Thanks to this new agreement, ElevenPaths and Hasten Group will work together to provide knowledge, synergies and technical resources for the service of new security solutions and the commercialization of proprietary developments. For example, FOSSID, Hasten Group's open software analysis tool, is integrated with Faast to protect in one single service the vulnerability of free and open source software (FOSS) and its licensing compliance. MobeeApps, Mobile Connect and Latch will offer custom projects of mobile apps that will natively incorporate dual factor identity protection and countermeasures for unauthorized access to digital services.

FOSSID is the most powerful, fast and reliable Hasten Group's technical tool for the audit of the presence of free code in the software of products developed by a company. FOSSID is the most advanced free code analysis and detection system on the market.

MobeeApps is the app generator that helps to create web and native apps with no need for previous programming knowledge. Thanks to its automatic processing, anyone can register and start using the platform.

Both ElevenPaths and Hasten Group will include these services in their respective portfolios to expand the spectrum of technological solutions, consulting and state-of-the-art development, thus boosting the cutting-edge services and solutions by both companies.
