

Leakedsource.com

Analyst's View

In January 2017, Leakedsource platform, which was dedicated since 2015 to harvest large databases breached after storing more than 3000 million potentially exposed accounts, disappeared suddenly.

The reputation of leakedsource.com was increasing due to the high number of times on which they were the only platform that had exclusive access to the main megabreaches made public in 2016. Several of them had been published by Peace of mind thanks to its collaborations with the identity of Jabber tessa88@exploit.im.

It is also recorded that the email account themarketsales@gmail.com would have been receiving various payments on a recurring basis for various amounts of money, which supports the hypothesis of this as a provider of service information.

Although the analyst Brian Krebs linked its owners with a possible cyberidentity based in Michigan, it has not been possible to unambiguously identify who were the owners that controlled it.

On the other hand, it is considered feasible that the cyberidentities that manage the abusewith.us platform could be related to those responsible for managing it. This situation should be an advice for the users of this type of websites taking into account the huge list of verified emails that a service such the aforementioned could be collecting by only logging the consultations performed.
